She noted that Mesa has changed over the years in its increasingly diverse community, which is why it's important to connect with the community in an authentic way as the City engages in setting policies and direction. She pointed out the importance of considering these individuals when establishing policies and budget allocations. She encouraged Council to think about outreach and diversity and what the short-term and long-term goals, policies and outcomes should be. She added that MAHC looks forward to continuing a positive working collaborative relationship with Council and City government.

P.J. O'mally, a Mesa resident, expressed his opinion on federalization of local law enforcement. He stated that there is an initiative in nationalizing police services through funding of equipment (i.e., helicopters and tanks) as well as police training in local jurisdictions. He added that federal funds comprise over one-third of Arizona's state budget. He noted that he wants to make the community aware that there is a deliberate strategy to bring all police departments under a national umbrella. He requested that local police maintain their independence and not be federally controlled.
