decade and expressed gratitude to the City of Mesa for taking the climate crisis seriously. She encouraged Council to compare Mesa's carbon neutrality goals of 2050 with those of Tempe, Phoenix, and Tucson, which all have carbon neutrality goals set for 2030. She suggested the establishment of a citizen council on climate and sustainability, and noted Scottsdale has a citizen appointed advisory commission that provides guidance on the prioritization of current and future environmental activities and makes recommendations to the City Council.

Shelly Gordon, a Mesa resident, spoke in support of MCAP 2.0 and her concern with the impact of climate change for City residents and businesses. She expressed the opinion that a Climate Action Advisory Commission would be a valuable tool for the City of Mesa in implementing its Climate Action Plan (CAP). She mentioned cities with similar commissions and what they do to advance sustainability. She added that MCAP 2.0 is ambitious and comprehensive in its approach, addressing all the threats to sustainability and citizens thriving, as well as providing good mitigation strategies and programs.

Vice Mayor Duff expressed her support for the establishment of a Climate Action Advisory Board (CAAB). She commented the advisory board is a great opportunity to bring collaboration between businesses, technology, residents, and all aspects of Mesa's community to achieve a common goal.

Mayor Giles commented Mesa embraces the fourth pillar of the MCAP 2.0, which is community engagement, and the Climate Action Plans within the valley and throughout the world rely on the advancement of technology. He mentioned City departments have found innovative ways to implement the CAP, and Mesa is more aggressive than a lot of other communities.
